

To Whom It May Concern,

The NJ Telephone Consumer Protection Act (Docket-02-278) should remain as it is. It has been very peaceful at nights without those annoying phone calls. Some of which we got in the wee hours of the nights and mornings. That is scary because you think that something has happened and there is an emergency. Even through out the day they seem to come at the most annoying times. Such as breakfast, lunch, dinner, while watching a very good show on TV and when you are trying to take a nap because you are not feeling well.

Let the companies that the telemarketers are working for sell their products like everyone else; via TV ads, newspaper ads, fliers or through the mail, etc. Then it will not be so annoying. So, please let New Jersey's law act as a guide line for the rest of the states in our great nation. Make no changes.
